Do You Know ? / Savez-Vous ?

Classical World Championship Begins

This championship is being held in Brissago, Switzerland, and is sponsored by Danneman Tobacco. It is a 14 game match. After 4 games, the score is Vladimir Kramnik (Russia) 2.5 vs Peter Leko (Hungary) 1.5. Kramnik won the first game with the black pieces and in the process sacrificed his Queen, and then won a tricky 2R vs Q ending. Attached to our cover e-mail is a cbh database with the game in it, so you can play it over. Here is the game for those who cannot access the database :

Canada Has New GM – Mark Bluvshstein

GTA junior, Mark Bluvshstein, picked up his third GM norm in the recent Canadian Closed and Zonal. He then needed his rating to go over 2500 to get the title. In the recent FIDE Preliminary October Rating list, Bluvshstein is shown at 2502. He will therefore now be awarded the title at the FIDE General Meeting later this month. Canada now has 4 GM's.

Canada Picks Olympiad Teams

The Chess Olympiad starts this month and runs from October 14 – 31. It will be held in Calvia de Mallorca, Spain.

The national team is composed of :

Alexandre Le Siege
Dimitry Tyomkin
Pascal Charbonneau
Yan Teplitsky
Igor Zugic
Mark Bluvshstein

Unfortunately, Canada's top rated player, GM Kevin Spraggett, withdrew " for health reasons ", but there is speculation that he may really have had a falling out of some kind with the team. In any event it is an unfortunate turn of events, but Yan Teplitsky is a worthy substitute addition to the team.

The Women's Team is :

Nava Starr
Dinara Khaziyeva
Diane Mongeau
Valentina Goutor

We wish them both the best of luck.

Toronto Senior's Active Championship

13 players participated in this event, held at the Bradgate Arms in Toronto. The winner was Bill Oaker.

" Chess King Ali " – A Chess Movie Review

(submitted by David Cohen)

"Chess King Ali" is a 25 minute documentary film made in 2002 in the Netherlands, directed by Meral Uslu. Thanks to sponsorship of the Dutch and many others, it was shown in Toronto, Sunday, May 2 at the Canadian International Documentary Festival, known as "Hot Docs" (<http://www.hotdocs.ca>). Here is the description from the program guide: "Originally from Iran, now living in the Netherlands, Ali is a twelve-year-old chess wiz who dreams of becoming world champion. He has the talent to represent Holland in international tournaments but as a refugee he is unable to leave the country."

The film chronicles the daily life of Ali Bitalzadeh, winner of the Dutch Under 12 Championships in regular and rapid play. His younger sister, a girl's champion for her age group, is also shown. Ali takes part in classroom training offered to the best Dutch youth players. His problem is that he can't accept invitations to compete abroad, particularly the European Youth Championships. Ali's father's refugee status has been revoked, and they are awaiting a decision on their appeal; if it fails, they may have to return to Iran. Meanwhile, Ali is not permitted to hold a Dutch passport. As Ali - used to making quick decisions in complicated positions at rapid chess - keenly observes: the government takes forever to make up it's mind, and then it often makes the wrong decision. Ali wisely notes that he is the same as other kids, so why shouldn't he be allowed to compete, just like the other kids?

In his daily life, Ali plays and enjoys other games with the children. Yet he does not join in any chess games with his classmates - they are not at his level. Is it arrogance? Probably not - I think he just would not find it any fun. He has lots of fun at the training sessions with his peers.

So why does Ali play chess? First, he set a goal of beating his father, but he achieved this long ago. Second, to pass the time. His parents are both medical doctors, but as refugees, they cannot practice. So, the family needs to occupy themselves while waiting for the government to rule on their case. Third, it helps him to escape. He does not need to think about his dangerous escape from Iran, nor about his grandparents whom he left behind.

Since the film was made, Ali's story has turned out well. He represented the Netherlands abroad at the 2003 European and World Boys Under 14 Championships, achieving a FIDE rating of 2229.
